Synopsis	Biodiversity assures the production of the wide variety of goods and services that are key in the modern world for food security, health, business and employment, and disease prevention. Without it, the current world economy could not be supported. Over the last 50 years, direct and indirect drivers have accelerated the diminution of biodiversity. Extinction of flora and fauns presents a danger for all Mankind. Cooperative action is the path to halt, and then reverse, the loss of biodiversity. To that end, the last meeting of the member nations of the “Convention on Biological Diversity” took place in October, in the Colombian city of Cali. Styled the Conference of the Parties (COP) 16, such meeting is the international instrument for the conservation and sustainable use of biodiversity. As the planet’s most biodiverse country per square kilometre, Colombia viewed the meeting as a step towards the global goal of living in harmony with nature by 2050. Colombia’s aspiration was that it be the COP of the people and the start of a Coalition for Peace with nature. A focus is the ability of individuals to help to protect the planet.
